Air Mail Will Try Out Here

May be Announced Before End of Next Parliament

Air mail service for Canada is very probable in the near future, and with an air port already in existence, Edmonton will likely be one of the first cities served in the development of the West, said K. A. Blatchford, M.P., for East Edmonton, today, following receipt of a letter from the Postmaster-General of Canada relative to air mails.

The Postmaster-General has the main responsibility for the service at the present time, and it has been pointed out to him that there is no better place to experiment with an air mail service than on the prairie.

The last mail service to Mexico, air mail service is not improbable, and in fact, it is very probable, in view of the size of the ship, but that false declarations were made in regard to the cargo.

The destination of the cargo, according to declarations made by the ship's master before the customs collector, was Mexico, but the cargo was destined for consumption in Los Angeles.

No Comment

The department has made no comment, but it is believed legal action might be taken to prevent the ship from being released.

The cargo of the Chris Moeller constitutes one of the most valuable

Twelve Year Old Girl Owns World's Most Elaborate Doll House

DODGE HEIRESS NOW LEARNING HOUSE-KEEPING

"Hill Top Lodge" a Miniature Residence Complete In All Details

ROCHESTER, Mich., Dec. 28.—A 12-year-old heiress to a millionaire fortune, the daughter of a lumber-building family, plays in the world's finest doll house on a country estate near here.

She is Frances M. Dodge, whose mother, Mrs. John F. Dodge, is one of the four fathe

The thousands of dollars which the doll house, "Hill Top Lodge," cost were spent, Mrs. Wilson explained, partly that Frances might have a place to play, but that she might learn from first-hand experience early in life the art of being a home-keeper.

But to her size.

The house, built just as a full-sized residence is built, with brick and stone walls, a tiled roof and concrete. It is heated and has electric lights and running water to its last detail. Its size compares with her size as the size of a man. It is built to accommodate the size of an adult.

The entrance hall is covered by a wide porch which extends across the front of the hall, surrounded by a tiny gold-framed mirror which hangs over the entrance door.

Off the hall is a coat closet and beyond it a bathroom, washroom and living room. It has a fireplaces and set draperies of green, taffeta, a sofa, a chair, a small round three-wheeled bookcase with tiny volumes of "Treasure Island." There is a tiny map secretary, with miniature letter paper houses; there is a miniature typewriter, a typewriter and their mother is trying to use them to teach Frances to type. There are numerous drawings and training for them. Frances already is learning to be a housewife-to-be.

The entrance hall is a tiny mudroom, a tiny vestibule school and their mother is trying to use them to teach Frances to type. There are numerous drawings and training for them. Frances already is learning to be a housewife-to-be.

The accounts of the house are approximately $10,000.

Over the mantle hangs a portrait of Frances' sister, who died a few years ago.

Next is the nursery. It is done in pink, and nearly a dozen dolls are resting on shelves. The dolls are dressed in blue, almost as small as minuscule babies, and the dolls nearly as large as Frances.

Little Ones Don't Count

"I am very glad that Frances proudly. If you point out that there are many more important things in life than a doll house, I say, 'Oh, well, I don't count the little ones.'

There is an old-fashioned cradle for the baby doll. There is a swing bed, a high-backed chair with a mirror. The dresser has a perfume bottle, a tiny blue bottle, and little bars of soap just big enough for a doll.

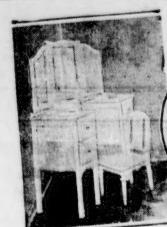

The dresser drawers contain stockings, girdles and shoes without number. There are mittens when the winter comes, and a tiny blue chair. A little blue chair grows forth from a tiny blue sofa.

There also is a musical pin cushion. Then there is a linen closet. It contains sheets, towels, washcloths and the dolls' clothes as well. There are stockings, girdles and shoes without number. There are mittens when the winter comes, and a tiny blue chair.

The tiny blue sofa is a tiny blue sofa, too, done in blue. It has a blue silk top, and a solid blue backrest filled with tiny blue feathers. Adding it is a tiled bathroom, with bath tub, toilet, bidet, washbasin, towels and bars of soap about the size of a pin.

In the dining room there is a built-in cabinet, which contains delicate porcelain, glassware and little things. There is a small tea service, and a tiny blue teapot where Frances serves bluebells to her guests.

The kitchen is the pride of Frances' heart. It has a real electric range, a tiny blue oven, a tiny set of pots and pans and jars of jelly, marmalade and the like. There are tiny blue plates, mostly lacey ones, hand-painted china.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1926.

A Really "Ancient" Dynasty.

The Mikado, who died on Saturday, was the 122nd emperor of Japan. His son is the descendant of a royal line extending from B.C. in unbroken succession. Beside it the line of houses of the other nations have been mushroom dynasties. The new Mikado has been reared since 1921, when his father became incapacitated for the responsibilities of government. His accession was regarded as fore-warning of any notable change in Japanese policy, domestic or foreign.

Monks Disposed.

The new Government of Lithuania has started a general round-up of Communists and Soviet emissaries and propagandists. Naturally the administration is not popular at Moscow, and the powers there are taking small means to dislodge their antagonists to it. The developments are like those which popular support the new dictatorship. They serve to confirm the suspicion that the former ministers were too friendly with the "Reds," and that it was time for a change, even at the price of a temporary suspension of the forms of democracy.

Building New Navies.

Britain has scrapped its pre-war fleet; and substituted a smaller number of far more powerful ships. Japan insists that it is free to build as many battleships as it may please under ten years, and two new ones are now being built. Each proposal to spend $105,000,000 on ten new light cruisers. Perhaps what is wanted next is a conference to find out what the four-power naval treaty meant. The arrangement does not seem to be meeting the end which was so much in view when the negotiations were in progress, that of easing the armament burden on the shoulders of the tax-payers.

A High Priced Bird.

Albertans who paid thirty-five cents per pound for their Christmas turkeys may have noted with some surprise that household in Great Britain had to pay 50 cents per pound for turkeys in good condition. There is more than one solution in that piece of news, unless appearances deceive. There seems to be also an opportunity lurking behind the news. Canada might be able to work up with the markets trade with the people in the old lands if the market turkeys go eloquent energetically. Better turkeys cannot be grown than adorn the festive boards in the holiday season, and the British buyer wants the best of this, as of other kinds, of farm products. The figures quoted show that he is willing to pay for what he wants.

Air Mail Service.

Hon. P. J. Venot, postmaster general, stated in an interview that plans are under way for testing out the practicability of transporting mail by air. The question is whether the service should be paid for itself, or whether the loss could be kept down to a point which would justify meeting the deficit out of tax money. Mails have for some years been carried across the United States regularly by airplane, at specified rates. The physical difficulties are not considered. Costs are no greater than there. What remains to be found is whether the demand for fast service is large enough to secure business at the rates which would have to be charged.

Dangerous Language.

The German Minister of Justice, aroused by the failure of a French court-martial to punish a French officer who shot a German civilian, has issued a call to his countrymen to unite "in regaining freedom for our peoples along the Rhine and Elbe, sovereignty for the German states in those areas."

These are not words which come properly from a minister of justice, touching a matter which has been before the courts and is to be the subject of an appeal to the government of a friendly power. They do not invite the settlement of a dispute between equals, or an impartiality. Nor are they appropriate from a minister of the government which, more than any other Germany has had since the war, has proclaimed its anxiety for better relations with France. If they do not prove to be an actual and effective incentive to violence and the threat of hostilities, that will be a matter for wonder.

The Money From Moscow.

While the British coal miners were striking for higher pay, which they doubtless needed, that was not the feature of the situation which moved Moscow to make along generous contributions to help the strike go on.

The Prava, the official organ of the Soviet oil-gentry, explained why it was necessary to prevent the strike coming to an end, in these words:

"It is the duty of every one to prolong the strike, even if a man has vast importance, involving sedition and bringing Britain's economic structure near to collapse."

That is why the Moscow subsidies were sent to "emperor" Clegg. It was not a strike Moscow was financing; but the "bosses" of Britain. The aim was not to enable the miners to get more pay, but to keep the industry and commerce of the country to ruin.

A better condition in life was what the British miners wanted and struck for. But that was not what the "bosses" were trying to obtain for the purpose behind the contributions was political. It was hoped by these to keep the miners out of the strike, and to keep the miners and society generally was plunged into the horrors which the same set of men, promoting the same mad theories, brought upon the Russians.

The Man By EDGAR A. GUEST

I grieve no man has given me of prayer.
I quaver not with any creed.
This world has room enough to spare
For all who are born with upward head.
A kindly heart is always fair.
No matter what its caste or breed.

Who plays the friend from day to day?
Whom we can trust to stand by us?
To smooth another's troubled way?
To score the arrow of pride?
Never a man I know is prone to pray.
I'm sure will never be denied.

For man must live his life on earth.
Where hate and sin and wrong abound.

"The hand of God is on the world,
He here the strength of it is found,
And here the judgment seat.

Who plants one rose on barren ground.

The test is: Is he kind and true?
Too big to play the brute or cheat?

Is he done and tries to be?

Is he here to meet?

If so, I say, when He is through,

He need not fear the judgment seat.

For man must live his life on earth.

Where hate and sin and wrong abound.
